Chad is a very busy guy. Between always working and his perfect workout routine, he hardly has any time to cook or really watch his diet. He really wants to eat well, and as a physical trainer, really wants his clients to eat well.

Chad goes to a lot of restaurants and fast food to get his quick meals, and always tries to get the healthiest thing on the menu. Sadly, he never has the time to stop and read all the nutrition facts, and is too socially awkward to ask the workers about it.

He also tries looking for the healthiest options when he goes to the grocery store. Unfortunately, there are just too many options and he does not have the time to look at all the labels. If only there was a quicker way.

Chad hears a totally legit advertisement on his workout radio about an app that can help him track the calories and what's in his food that he does eat, to help him make better choices. Not only is it convenient, but also really quick.

He decides to try the app, going through a drive-through. He's able to quickly narrow down the healthiest option, saving him enough time to get to his clients early.

Thanks to the app, Chad is able to reach his peak health and carefully watch his intake. He was also able to recommend it to his clients to help them out, too.

Chad Johnson is a man who works at a construction site for his father. He works long hours and as a single dad, he must feed his daughter every night. This leads Chad to tend to take his daughter to restaurants more often, because the hassle involved with cooking outweighs the benefits when he is tired from working.

Chad has a daughter who is allergic to a certain food dye. When she goes to restaurants, they normally do not list the ingredients in the food and sometimes figuring out which foods she can eat is tricky. Chad wants his daughter to be able to eat anything she wants and is able to eat, but experimenting with finding new foods she can eat presents way too much of a challenge.

Chad downloaded our app, a "What Is In Your Food?" tracker in order to try and make it easier to see what is in his daughters food.

When Chad goes to a restaurant the next day with his daughter, he looks up the food in which his daughter wants to try and then uses the information to see if his daughter can safely eat that food.

His daughter then is able to try a dish at the restaurant she had been wanting to try, since there was no dyes the app suggested to be in the food.

Because she tried the new food, she now gets it every time they go to that restaurant. His daughter is very happy and Chad is happy seeing his daughter happy. He will use the app when finding new food for his daughter again.
